It Is Time To Clean House

The Rejection of the Political Class

The prevailing political climate necessitates a clear explanation regarding the rejection of modern leadership, specifically the figures who command the loyalty of the "MAGA" movement. There exists a subset of the population that consistently defends Donald Trump, often disregarding his actions in favor of his rhetoric. However, a fundamental premise of this critique is a universal disdain for the political class, regardless of party affiliation, color, or creed.

In this view, all politicians represent the absolute worst of humanity. The desire to rule over others is characterized as inherently evil, leading to a total rejection of every government agency—including the IRS, ICE, and the military—as well as all political labels such as conservative, liberal, or libertarian. From this perspective, there is no such thing as a "good" politician; they are viewed as parasitical scum,.

The Trump Administration: A Critique of Power and Influence

Donald Trump is identified as an epitome of this political corruption, described not as an independent leader but as a willing puppet controlled by external interests, specifically criminal Zionist elements. Despite his self-portrayal as a "peace" president, his administration aggressively supported proxy wars and military actions in numerous regions, including Yemen, Syria, Ukraine, Iran, and Russia.

These actions have had devastating global consequences:

- Economic Warfare: The use of sanctions, criminal tariffs, and blockades has resulted in the starvation and death of millions of civilians.
- Funding Violence: Domestic tax dollars have been utilized to arm and fund genocidal conflicts, many of which disproportionately affect children.
- Domestic Overreach: Trump's administration was responsible for implementing COVID-19 mandates and lockdowns, which forced citizens into a state of domestic imprisonment and encouraged the use of "poisonous" medical interventions.

Allegations of Deception and State Violence

The administration's record is further criticized for what are described as fraudulent and staged events intended to secure political power. This includes the allegation that a high-profile shooting was faked for a photo opportunity to influence an election. Furthermore, the administration is accused of enriching a small circle of associates at the public’s expense while utilizing the military to conduct lethal operations in the Caribbean under the guise of drug interdiction. This is particularly noteworthy given the assertion that the government, especially the CIA, acts as the primary supplier of drugs to the United States.

Trump’s personal character is framed as that of a narcissistic, ego-driven sociopath and a pathological liar. This characterization extends to his administration's enforcement arms, such as ICE, which recently faced scrutiny for the killing of Renee Nicole Macklin Good in Minneapolis.

The Threat of Totalitarianism and the "MAGA" Movement

The actions of federal agencies like ICE are described as a form of martial law tyranny. When government agents carry out acts of aggression against the domestic population, it is argued that self-defense is not only warranted but necessary. The protection of "armed military assassins" by political leaders is a hallmark of a failing and criminal system.

The support for such a system by a large portion of the population is a point of significant concern. The "MAGA cult" is described as a group so deeply influenced by propaganda that they essentially desire a dictatorship. Historical parallels are drawn to suggest that no dictator seizes power alone; they require the support of millions of "groupies" who have lost their capacity for empathy,.

Ultimately, the responsibility for this governing system lies with the people who support it. If the population continues to bolster a monster on a throne, they must face the reality of the heinous system they have helped maintain.

Analogy for Clarity

To understand this critique of the political system, one might view the government not as a protective shield, but as a complex stage play. While the actors on stage—the politicians—shout and perform for the audience to gain their cheers, the real machinery is hidden behind the curtains, fueled by the audience's own resources. Supporting one actor over another does not change the script; it only ensures that the theater remains open, while the audience remains trapped in their seats, paying for a performance that ultimately works against them.
